Quality management. Process mapping. Speed to production. In the past 50 years, a rigorous, measurement-based methodology called Six Sigma has brought production management to previously unimaginable levels of success and sophistication. Top corporations such as Motorola and GE have built their reputations, products, and revenues using this approach. Indeed, Six Sigma has found widespread application in every significant industry and business-except marketing and sales. In Sales and Marketing the Six Sigma Way, sales and quality guru Michael Webb shows how to blend marketing and sales efforts with the cutting-edge methods of Six Sigma to boost their bottom lines. With Webb's book as a guide, readers learn to engineer rapid routes to customer value, accurately predict future revenue, and ensure return on investment for their projects. In Sales and Marketing the Six Sigma Way, you will:

- * Find out why "the usual fixes" for sales problems don't work
- * Meet executives who have used Six Sigma to improve marketing and sales results
- * See the pitfalls that await the unwary when applying process improvement in sales
- * Learn how to introduce Six Sigma to sales and marketing professionals
- * Discover through examples and cases how to manage sales as a process

Webb walks readers through several Six Sigma sales and marketing projects from start to finish, highlighting the tools, decisions, and results that made them successful. He shows the practical methods managers use to translate process improvement principles to the human world of selling and marketing. With his dual background in sales and marketing management and in quality improvement, Webb speaks clearly to readers in both disciplines. This makes Sales and Marketing the Six Sigma Way, the indispensable guide for sales and marketing professionals who want to excel in today's business environment, and for quality improvement experts who want to help them.

Marketing. What is it anyway? I would rephrase it as: "What is not marketing?" That sounds a little trite, but think about it. Marketing changes perceptions and beliefs. It creates needs and wants. It shows us features and benefits. For any company or organization to flourish, it needs to convince people that they are offering a product or service that meets the needs of the individual or business. They must explain the problem and then offer the solution. You need to make your product or service something that people want. Your business needs marketing.

Over the past decade there has been a monumental shift taking place in the way that people buy. There have been numerous books written about this change from a business and marketing perspective and finally we have one that addresses sales. The way we sell has been forever transformed by the way people buy. The idea that selling has changed is not new - what is new are the approaches, techniques and overall philosophy described in sales shift. Frank Belzer draws on his years helping marketers and sales people work together and shares these skills and insights. What do buyers no longer need from sales people? What do all
